I live at south of these proposed buildings. Others will complain about these towers blocking their view of Ching. park, so I won't . But I am concerned about any children who might live in this new development. Is there a designated playground for them? Or is the developer expecting them to cross 6 lanes of Queen Street and then traverse half of Ching park to get to the play area there. That might work for moms and toddlers, also for teens but not for 8-12 year olds who should be starting to develop a little autonomy but can't safely make it across Queen Street, esp with the added traffic that these buildings will attract.

thanks for your consideration,
