Sonya : Thank You for pointing me in the right direction.

I still think city council is missing the mark on this fireworks issue.

No such problem occurred prior to Diwali. The resolution to restrict 3 meter high to only those who have a permit is off the mark. What if a seller who has a permit decided to set off fireworks in their neighbourhood who would know.

Years ago we had residential fireworks that were kinda lame. Fire cracked, sparklers etc. noting like today. The only thing different is we respected our neighbours and stopped at 11pm.

So again the issue is not if city council is going to offend any one group, the issue is what's going to be done about the all night any hour of the night being awakened by a startlingly noise.

So all your resolution and not a single curfew enforcing law .

I thought city council was going to offer the certain offending group an option to pay for a city controlled and run display.

You can educate as much as you want but if your going to speed you'll speed.
